Short Bio.

Growing up in a family of six, it was always obvious that I was the strange one. After falling from a flight of stairs and hitting my head on some bricks as a child, I became fascinated with the idea of pretending to be someone you're not for a living. I was introduced to acting by my father who had been in many plays. I've also understood comedy and how it works sense the age of six and had a knack for it. The first time I found myself on a stage was in school when I was six. I was in a play of the three pigs and was holding a large cardboard piece, which had a huge hole in it. It was supposed to be one side of a house made of sticks. I thought to myself that if I let the wall fall towards me and I ducked down the window would go over me like a Charlie Chaplin film. I let it go and it did. I sat there and listened to one hundred adults laugh and decided that I would pursue that sound for the rest of my life.
